Dear Fellow Commissioners:

RE: PEW REPORT ON "LOW RISK" NEW PRISON ADMITTEES IN 2011

We have been told that Oregon is incarcerating an increasing percentage of "low risk" criminals. At our June 29th meeting it was reported that over the past three years (2009-11) the percentage of "low risk" criminals going to prison had risen to almost 26% of new admittees in 2011. (Please find attached a copy of the specific PEW Power Point slide.)

After reviewing this information from PEW, Oregon's prosecutors began to ask questions about the accuracy of this report. We asked for the underlying case data supporting this Power Point slide and, after working our way through three different organizations (PEW, DOC and CJC) were finally provided the list of 850 "low risk" criminal defendants admitted to prison in 2011 in Oregon. This list was subsequently distributed to the 36 elected Oregon District Attorneys and they have now provided specific factual information about almost all of these defendants and their cases. A copy of their information filled report is also attached. As you might imagine, this has involved a great deal of work, but Oregon's prosecutors are very concerned about the accuracy of the information that is being provided.

We have been informed that this list was compiled using what is called the Oregon Public Safety Checklist, which is a new risk assessment tool devised by professionals here in Oregon. Please find enclosed an instructive email from Craig Prins, the Executive Director of the Oregon Criminal Justice Commission, which was provided when the list of defendants was delivered and which explains in some detail how this risk assessment tool was used to create the list of "low risk" offenders. As you will note, there are some significant deficiencies with the use of this risk assessment tool in sentencing.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Oregon Public Safety Checklist does not include any out-of-state convictions or juvenile convictions (however, those are noted in red in our report when we could independently identify them). That will invariably lead to a lower risk score with certain defendants. Secondly, we have been informed that sex offenders are not included because they will consistently score "low risk". There are virtually no sex offenders on this list.

The list of defendants includes their crimes of convictions, their criminal histories (as far as we can determine) and brief factual descriptions to help you understand the circumstances of each case and defendant. As you will see, there are many serious violent criminals, including felony crimes of domestic violence and homicide, serious career property criminals, significant drug dealers, burglars, embezzlers and thieves, felony drunk drivers and assorted other serious felony criminals. Most alarmingly, there are even two defendants on death row in Oregon on the list, including Bruce Turnidge, one of the defendants convicted last year for killing two police officers with a bomb at a bank in Woodburn, Oregon.

As our friends at PEW are fond of saying, there are a couple of “take aways” that we would like to suggest from this information.

First, is the question of whether or not a risk assessment tool is useful or helpful at sentencing. Risk assessment tools have a long and important history with our corrections system. They have been used effectively for many years to manage populations of inmates and probationers/parolees because they can be a very rational way of sorting criminals. However, even within this field, risk assessment tools have limitations. Often in the field the risk score of an inmate or probationer is overruled in favor of a higher risk assessment. And some categories of criminals (sex offenders) cannot be accurately assessed with such a risk tool. These weaknesses are even more apparent when used to determine criminal sentences, which the attached list of defendants clearly demonstrates. To many, including perhaps some members of our commission, these defendants do not appear to be “low risk” despite their apparent scores.

The most important purpose of criminal sentencing is to achieve “justice” through a proportional punishment that reflects the seriousness of the crime(s), the facts of the case and the defendant’s criminal history (if any). Judges strive to carefully consider all these factors in designing sentences. “Risk” of committing a new crime can be a factor in any sentence, but in the most serious crimes (including most felonies and some misdemeanors) “risk” takes a back seat to the first priority of “justice.” Therefore, as with this list of cases, a risk score can seem very out of place in a criminal sentencing.<sup>2</sup>

Second, the reason this group of defendants does not appear to be “low risk” is that our criminal justice system in Oregon is already doing a very good job of sorting out the vast majority of convicted felons from our prison system. As you know from our previous discussions, Oregon has a very low incarceration rate when compared to other states (33rd out of 50). More than 75% of all convicted felons in Oregon are never sent to prison. So, it is not surprising that the “lowest risk” inmates who went to prison in Oregon in 2011 do not appear to be “low risk” at all.

<sup>2</sup> Any sentencing structure that identifies a group of defendants based upon age and gender for harsher sentences will inevitably be subject to attack in our court system. Age and gender can be considered by individual judges in individual cases, but no group of defendants can be targeted for harsher sentences based upon those factors, whether they are male or female, old or young.

We believe that this kind of specific, factual information is far more useful as a basis for good public safety policy in Oregon. We hope it can more accurately guide our public policy discussions.

We look forward to discussing this information with you as we move ahead.

Sincerely,

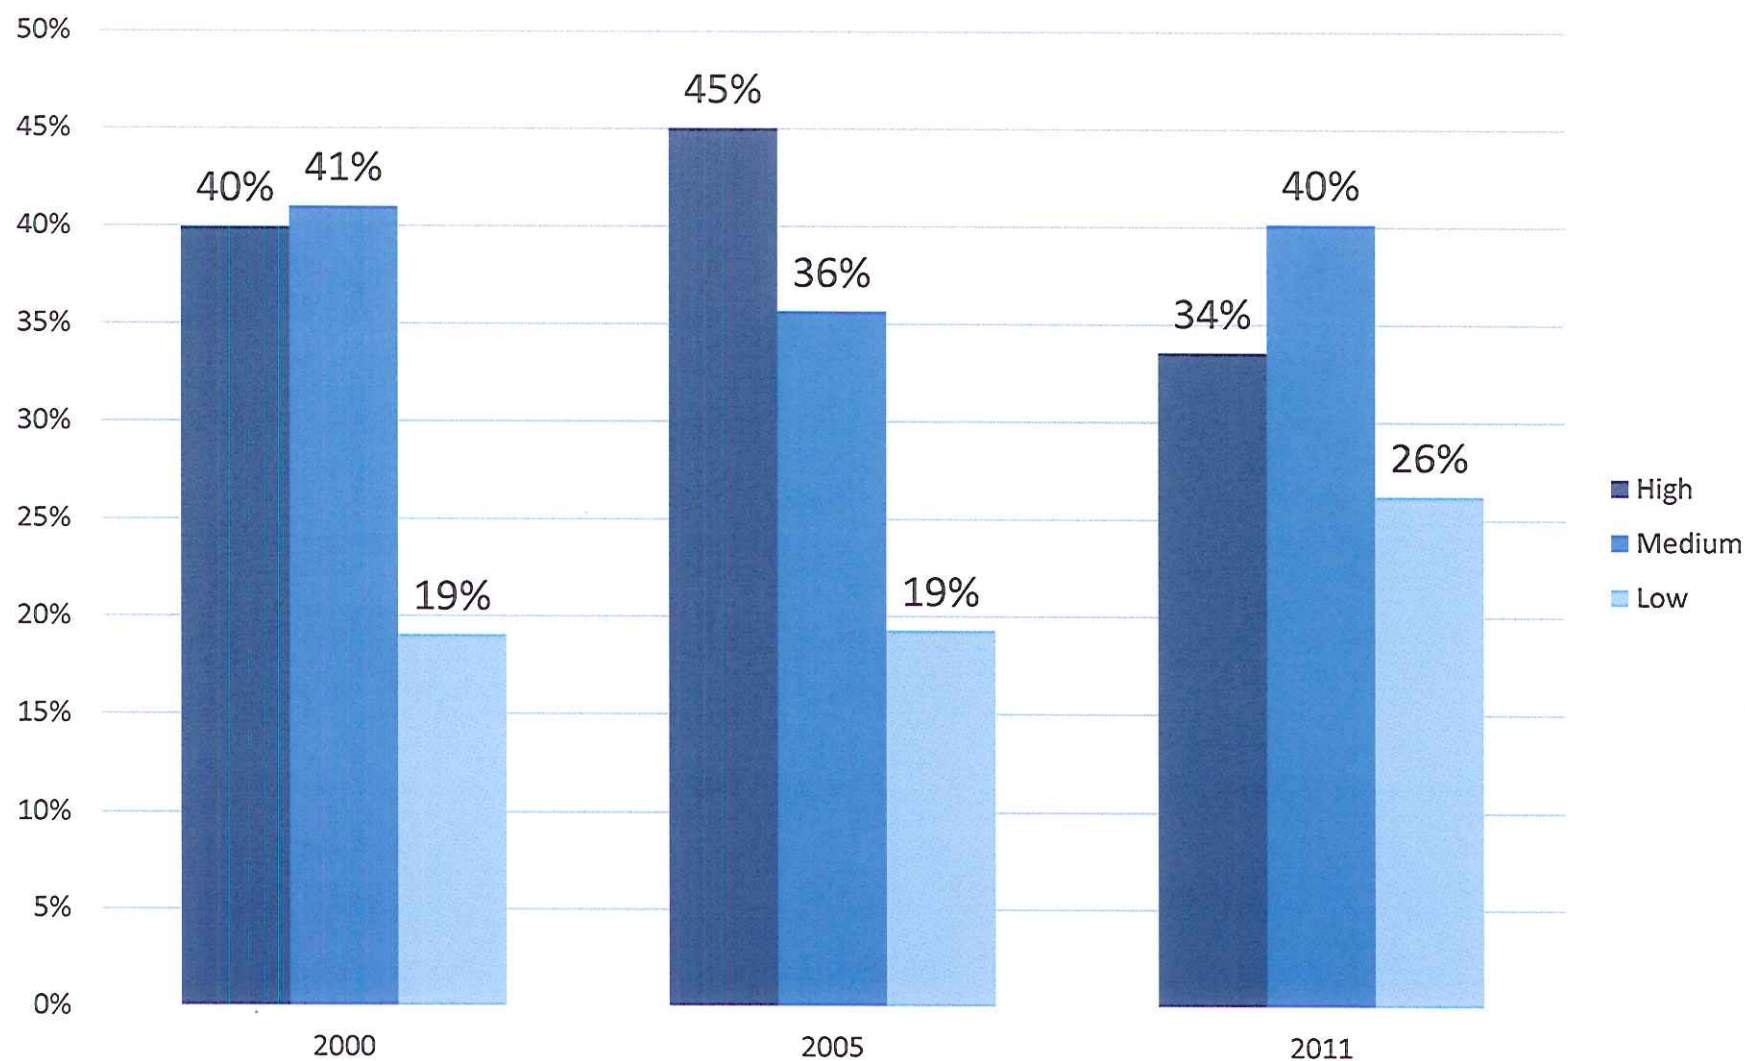

John S. Foote

John,

My Staff has prepared the enclosed data as follow up to the questions you directed to Director Colette Peters over the last couple weeks. This related to the PEW power point presentation, specifically SLIDE 23 of the June 29 presentation to the Governor's Public Safety Commission entitled "prison drivers."

You commented in the hearing, and dialogued with Director Peters, about wanting to understand the 2011 admits to prison that are categorized as low risk by the Public Safety Checklist.

Enclosed are records for the 850 offenders who make up the 26% of prison intakes that were categorized as low risk in that slide. The State identification number of the individual , Crime Category of Conviction (Drug, Property, Person, Other), and Public Safety Checklist Score for the offender are included for each individual.

For these offenders, based upon the information we have available, the expected recidivism rate for the 850 would be approximately 6%. The cutoff score for this population would be an 18% chance of recidivating, so offenders with a chance of recidivating from 1-18% are included. Stated another way, Approximately 6% of these offenders are predicted to be reconvicted of a felony within 3 years of being released from prison. Put differently, 51 of the 850 would be predicted to recidivated based upon this score.

A couple of notes about these offenders, and the Public Safety Checklist score:

- 1) No offenders who were committed to state prison for a Sex Offense as defined in Chapter 181 are included in the 850 records. Felicity Rose made that statement in the hearing on 6/29/12. That is because the Public Safety Checklist is a general recidivism score, it is not the best tool to measure likelihood for an adult male offender to recidivate by committing a sex crime. We believe the STATIC 99 is the best tool for that population, and that risk score would provide a necessary and complementary assessment of risk. I'm sure Clackamas County Sheriff's or Community Corrections can walk you through what is used in Clackamas for assessing & managing sex offenders.
- 2) The public safety checklist is based upon Oregon data, and does not include out of state convictions. We believe the District Attorney & the Court, and the supervising authority should always review the complete criminal history of the offender to get a complete assessment of the offender's criminal history and also likelihood to commit a future crime. A significant out of state criminal history or extremely recent in state criminal behavior that is not yet captured in the electronic data is important information that the stakeholders can use to augment this assessment and get the very best idea of the risk posed by an individual of recidivating .
- 3) The public safety checklist should always be augmented by offender information known to officials in the public safety system that would not be included in the data that can be extracted from electronic records and then aggregated into a risk score. Such information would be things like the offender just missed a court date, just submitted a dirty urine test, or other issues that would be indicative of a higher risk to recidivate. Generally, these could be classified as “dynamic” or changing factors in the offender’s life separate from the gender, age, and criminal history of the offender. Also, individual assessment of what is driving the offender’s criminal behavior (the LSCMI is a common tool for this) would provide the Judge, DA, and supervising authority an assessment of what is driving the criminal behavior of the individual so the supervising authority can build a plan for how to increase public safety by reducing the risk the offender will commit future crime by addressing the following types of issues:

- a. Anti-social personality
  - b. Anti-social attitudes and values
  - c. Anti-social associates
  - d. Family dysfunction
  - e. Poor self-control, poor problem-solving skills
  - f. Substance abuse
  - g. Lack of employment/employment skills
- 4) No risk score can tell our Oregon officials what the appropriate sentence is in an individual case. The DA & Judge must consider all relevant factors as to the offense, the offender, and the victim in recommending and determining an appropriate sentence under Article 1, section 15 of the Oregon Constitution. The risk score is a piece of information that can help ascertain the likelihood of future criminal behavior, but at the end of the day is just a piece of information that helps inform a very important and complicated decision. For example, we know some offenders may be very low likelihood to recidivate, but the crime they have been convicted of is so serious that a lengthy prison sentence is the only available means to bring accountability to the offender and closure to the victim. The CJC has always been clear that this risk score is a piece of information that may or may not be relevant when making an individual decision about an individual offense.
- 5) The Public Safety Checklist is an actuarial assessment, just like what an insurance underwriter would use to assess likelihood of a car accident or an epidemiologist would use in categorizing risk factors and the likelihood of heart disease. It is based upon observing the recidivism rates of over 250,000 Oregon offenders. It has been validated by applying it to over 55,000 offenders. Numerous studies, in several fields of study, have shown that an actuarial assessment like this will improve the predictive accuracy of a system over the clinical judgment of an individual who is not using an actuarial tool. That being said, at the end of the day whether a single individual is or is not going to have a car wreck, heart attack, or recidivate depends on that individual’s behavior.

Director Peters is out of town at a national conference. We worked hard with her to get this information to you. This level of data, at an individual level, is not generally what DOC & CJC would provide to PEW or Commissioners. However, we wanted to take the effort to provide you this data in this instance and Director Peters & I directed staff to do so. We will probably not be able to provide this granular a data in the future, due to staff time constraints.

Sincerely,

Craig Prins

The D escaped to Mexico where he later confronted the Vic's children and assured them that he did not kill their mother. He was on the FBI's most wanted list for a time, but the Marshalls were unable to find him in Mexico where he was hiding. We caught him about 4 years later, sneaking across the Arizona border. He was charged with murder, where the minimum sentence is 300 months. He pled guilty to the lesser-charges here and we agreed to a lower sentence.	240	Misd DUII (WA)	0	0	0	1	1
4922	42	ZIBULSKY	MULT	Theft 1 x2, Criminal Mistreatment I x3, ID Theft x4	0.16667567	D is the daughter of the elderly Vic (born in 1926). After his wife (D's mother) died, the Vic moved in with D's family and she became his POA. Vic lived with the D for about a year, but eventually moved out--in part due to frustration that the D wouldn't let him know the status of his finances. After he moved out, Vic revoked D's POA and requested an accounting of his money. D responded by withdrawing all but $5.32 from his bank account and filing a petition for guardianship against the Vic. After the guardianship petition was denied, D sent an accounting which showed that she had withdrawn over $17,000 of the Vic's money. D refused to return any of the money, claiming that Vic owed her over $30,000. D also refused to turn over the cremains of the Vic's wife. D accepted no responsibility for her crimes and was convicted at trial.	30	None Found	0	0	0	0	0

D's MO regarding his abuse of the Vic was to pull the Vic around by her long hair and slam her into the wall, floor etc. D is a survivalist and owns many firearms and assault rifles. Vic obtained a RO in April 11, and the D surrendered 15 firearms at that time. He violated that RO by failing to surrender them all. D hit the Vic in the head and pulled her hair straining her neck multiple times. Later, he was still angry and walking around the living room holding a rifle. Vic and the kids were in the same room. D made threatening gestures/postures and the Vic was scared the D would shoot them or police. ☹️	24	None Submitted	0	0	1	3

D was angry and jealous at his girlfriend (Vic) for breaking up with him. One night, he broke into her home by using a spare key. He waited until she went to bed. He then yelled, "You're gonna die, whore!" D immediately straddled her and strangled her with his hands. When she tried to scream for help, she was not able to make any noise. There was a violent struggle where she fought for her life. She was able to break contact for a short while before he dragged her into the hallway. He straddled her, strangled her more, and punched her repeatedly. D said that he would rather die and take her with him than go to jail. When she was able to gasp out their children’s names, he stopped. D later told officers that he did strangle her and it crossed his mind to kill her. The Vic’s neck was covered in redness, scabs, and bruising from the strangulation. Vic suffered black eyes, severe pain, and bruising all over her face and neck.
