

Chapter 2: CITIZEN INVOLVEMENT

Citizen involvement is essential in the governmental process to promote the general health and welfare of the total community. New approaches must be developed by local government to effectively involve citizens in the planning and decision-making process. Positive accomplishments can be achieved when citizens become involved in planning programs.

ISSUES

- Public awareness and understanding of land use proposals
- Communication between the County and community groups, special interests, and individuals
- Public availability of land use information
- Mechanisms for public participation
- Methods for decision makers to respond to citizen concerns and comments
- The role of various public groups in the planning process

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

- ORS 215 and 197 require the County to provide opportunities for citizen participation and to establish a citizens committee to assist the County in implementing and evaluating its citizen involvement program.
- Clackamas County has an officially adopted Citizen Involvement Program, and that program is evaluated annually by the Committee for Citizen Involvement.
- Continued public awareness of and citizen participation in the ongoing planning process is essential to responsible decisions which recognize public concerns and priorities.

- Insure successful citizen participation through ongoing education in the planning process.
- Insure regular communication between citizens and County officials (governing body, Planning Commission, and Planning staff).

- Insure a continuing citizen participation effort in the planning process and periodic reevaluation.

2.A Policies

Criteria regulating voting shall be included in the bylaws;
 - 2.A.7.3 That the organization's structure is capable of providing necessary coordination and communication between its members and County departments, and elected and appointed officials;
